Recent studies have suggested a role for Notch signaling in the context of tissue homeostasis, including self-renewal of the intestinal stem cells. It has also been proposed that Notch signaling might be involved in tumorigenesis. In this paper, we review the existing literature on the role of the Notch pathway in gastrointestinal and breast cancers, and we discuss the evidence that implicated Notch signaling in the maintenance and malignant transformation of cancer stem cells. We show that the Notch pathway appears to act on both tumor and stromal cells to regulate tumor progression and to promote stem cell self-renewal. In particular, we discuss our recent
