Android and iOS is now using a new framework. The "learn more" panel for QuickPing is now displayed automatically on startup when the widget is in the foreground. The update process now only takes 10 to 15 seconds. QuickPing Highlights

QuickPing is the real-time network monitor designed specifically for your pocket or desktop. By just launching the simple app, you get a network-graph directly on your desktop which updates and refreshes in real time. In order to give this app a little more "oomph", we've added several new features. QuickPing now supports user-defined categories for your network traffic, save your favorite links and filters, and supports multi-processor systems to display everything live. Etcdauditor is a small utility to read from and change the contents of etcd. You can use it to audit the contents of etcd, make and change configurations, and create custom profiles for consistent reads and writes. Etcdauditor works by wrapping etcd key/value operations, and keeping a watch on the target etcd server. When it detects an update to etcd, it makes a copy of the original data and then makes a

What's New In Ping History?

Ping History is a simple and useful gadget that will display a ping status graph directly on your desktop. In the settings dialog you can choose which server Ping History should use to collect its data. The gadget then tests periodically how well this server is reachable at the moment from your Internet connection. Ping History estimates the round-trip time thereby in milliseconds and draws a graph of the last 2 minutes. In the upper right corner you can see the most recent round-trip time and the highest round-trip time which occurred in the last 2 minutes. Ping History is an invaluable tool if you need to keep an eye on a specific server or your overall network performance (for ambitious network applications like VoIP or online games).
