VOB2Audio Free

Extracts AC3 audio from an input VobList file. You can choose to extract audio only from the audio track, or audio and subtitle. The application uses ffmpeg for extracting audio. There is no graphical user interface, you have to use the command line to extract and save the file. There is no GUI to configure the parameters, but a simple text file is available to you. This command line can be called from a windows batch script, with a parameter to save the output file (with a path) in a specified directory. There is no gui, no command line, no parameters, but it's a new nice tool to extract and save ac3 from voblist, which is a file which contains multiple vobs (very short video files, like 1-2 minutes). I've posted here this file to test it: This is a pure command line utility. You have to open a command prompt to use this. There are no gui for settings (like duration, or number of file to extract) and no parameter to choose which kind of audio you want (audio only, or audio+subtitle). vob2audio will extract the video and the audio in the order the file is saved in voblist.txt (or from the command line with the -v option). If the file is saved in the original order, then this is the same order the audio and the video will be saved. The application will save the audio in the file format that is selected with the save option. It will save the audio in ogg format if you chose that with the save option. This utility needs to be run from a command prompt with administrator privileges. There is no gui to configure the parameters. The command line parameters are: vob2audio -o "path of the output file" -s vobs vobs:voblist.txt: Specify the path to the voblist
