March 26, 2019 itsshare.com The sitemap has the filepath "" and The sitemap has the filename "" Is it possible to have a file with the same url and name as the sitemap? Or a better solution? A: I don't have a fully working solution for your problem, but I can provide an intuitive approach to the problem. Your crawler apparently downloads files with the following naming convention. This pattern matches a file name in a sitemap. So, for a given sitemap, you can collect URLs from the sitemap until you get one of the above file names. Using this scheme, you can think about collecting URLs from a sitemap until you get either a file or a URL that can be converted into a file. Once you have a URL that can be converted into a file, you simply download it, extract the content and rename it to the same name. The sitemap will give you URLs that you can convert into files. This approach looks straight forward, but it misses some important aspects of your problem: It doesn't take into account extensions It doesn't collect URLs 3da54e8ca3
