downloadxforcekeygenCivil3D201464bitpatch Airflow neutralization with a floating PAPR in outer space. A novel method of reducing the power density caused by the presence of nonlinearity is presented. Airflow neutrality is achieved by the presence of a pressure-divergent nozzle at the output of an acoustic resonator. The flow is essentially neutralized by a downstream, velocity-increasing, divergent nozzle. This velocity-increasing divergence cancels the flow nonlinearity of the resonator. We will show that the "acoustic pressure" at the resonator outlet is the same as in the case of conventional, nonresonant, sources. This is demonstrated by a simulated experiment, and by an analytical analysis of the acoustic forces acting on the structure.

Cancer risks for children exposed to industrial pollution: a literature review. This paper reviewed epidemiological literature on the risks of cancers in children exposed to pollutants at work, from a specialised register of radiation protection, compiled by a consortium of registries, and implemented in France since 1999. Published risks of such cancers on environmental hazards, most notably those of lead, nuclear power plant industry and chlorinated hydrocarbons have been analysed. Data confirm the hypothesis of a non-negligible risk, based both on the cumulative dose and on the vulnerability of the most vulnerable tissues and organs. However, the extent of the problem remains unclear owing to insufficient epidemiological data and to the level of exposures that are most likely to have occurred. In addition, the subsequent mortality and morbidity, particularly during adolescence, cannot be evaluated on any basis so far. The results of this literature review raise ethical questions, notably on the validity of the risk-benefit assessment, because the risks are likely to be due to cumulative exposures and are probably underestimated. The current legal framework of the French environmental protection laws, including the protection of children, now require new guidance, especially concerning the exploration of the exposure limits corresponding to acceptable risk for adult workers, as well as new exposures criteria for workers' children and other vulnerable populations.
